A young man wanted to get a fox skin to please his new bride.

A wolf caught a young goat returning from the pasture.

The fox recognized trouble and thought quickly about how to save himself.

The goat knew that he couldn't escape, but he thought that he could fool the wolf.

"I will be happy to do that, but I can't help you when you hold my tail so tightly. Please let go, and I'll immediately give you my skin."

The goat said, "I know that you'll eat me, my friend, but I'd like just one favor from you. Would you play a tune so that I can dance once last time?"

The man let go, and the fox ran away laughing.

Some dogs heard the music and became curious. They saw the wolf and began to chase him. The wolf knew that he'd been fooled.
