IS THIS CERTIFICATE RIGHT FOR ME?
The Social Justice in Public Service graduate certificate develops public service leaders who can influence policy with a focus on social justice. Students will explore factors that contribute to inequity among various groups, with a focus on providing a theoretical background and methods to analyze social justice issues in public service. Students will be exposed to principles of social justice as they apply to government and the nonprofit sector in education, health, environment, transportation, and housing policy domains among others.

SOCIAL JUSTICE IN PUBLIC SERVICE AT UCF
UCF offers a Graduate Certificate in Social Justice in Public Service that is aimed at students who wish to prepare for careers related to social justice issues.

Curriculum
The 15-credit-hour graduate certificate requires the completion of two core courses and three electives. The program examines the theoretical background of social justice - exploring topics such as human rights, income distribution and the role of markets.

Electives
Graduate students within the School of Public Administration may choose to apply the certificate elective credits to their graduate program if applicable.
